THE NEW CRITICISM.

Scene, Kenneth Bolton's study. He wakens from acleep.

Bolton—it's all true, then. How terrible, waking up to life again with such a dead weight on brain and heart! I was a coward not to take a header off Westminster bridge. I can't face Rose again-my Rose of the world! (Sees a half finished letter, which lies near a brandy bottle on the table close beside him.) Gad, I must have dreamed I finished that and posted it. She has been grieving about me, I know. I wonder where those cartridges are. (He goes into the next room. A knock at his door and a sweet voice.) "Kenneth, may I come in?" (Another kneck, and, after a pause, Rosamund Findlay timidly enters.) Rosamund-Kenneth, I met Hawkins just going out to buy your breakfast, and he let me in. Oh, Kenneth's not here, after all, but he has been here. There are the newspapers. How my heart aches for him! What wretches those critics are! I should like to see them killed with my own eyes! He's begun a letter. I wonder if it is to me. (Rends.) "My own precious girl, I have not courage to see you again. give me for what I am about to"— On, has he killed himself? (She means and falls on her knees, with her face upon the letter. Bolton comes to the doorway, the revolver still in his hand, which he conceals when he sees Rosamund.)

Bolton—My darling! Rosamund—Oh, you are alive! Bolton (taking both her hands)—You ought not to have come here, Rose.

Rosamund—You wouldn't come to me. You left me sitting in the box at the theater without a word. It nearly broke my Bolton-I could not face you and your mother after that wretched flusco. I knew then that the play was a hopeless failure. I went out alone and walked the streets until I could get the morning papers. Those were terrible hours, but per-haps I felt a spark of hope until I read what the critics had to say. You know that they all agreed my play was the work of a madman; that it isn't even original; that it's immoral; that it's absord; that it's the worst bit of work put on the London stage for a dozen years. You know how our hopes were built upon it. And what is left but debt, disgrace and disappointment? Who will take any of my work after this? What is life to me without hope of you? I will not accept it!

Rosamund—Oh, Kenneth, if you kill yourself, you kill me too. (The voices of men laughing together boisterously are heard in the hall.) How terrible! I must have forgotten to close the outside door. (Bolton hastily puts her into the next room, and, drawing the portiere, stands before the door, as though at bay. Alexander Orme and five or six other men, more or less young, enter, following their own knock.)

here to laugh at me?
The Journalist—Laugh? Don't talk rot! We've come to pat you on the back.

Bolton—In heaven's mane, for what?

The Journalist—Because you're in such deuced good luck. Haven't you seen the saying it's not exactly friendly in you all to come spying about here, gloating over (They all close billarlously around him, slapping him on the back and poking him in the ribs )

A Playwright-Don't be an ass, boy! We all know you're green, only born two years ago-when you came to London -and this is your first play. But you can't get us to believe that you're donkey enough not to see that the critics have simply combined to make your fortune.

Bolton-For God's sake, take your sarcasm somewhere else! They've ruined me, that's all. A Playwright—Well, old man, you are behind the times! Haven't you learned yet that nowadays the public goes by con-traries? It's all the new criticism. If the critics damn you, the people run after you. They're filled at once with morbid curiosity. They want to see for themselves what's wrong—whether it's private spite, or whether you've got anything to say that it would be better for them not to hear. strength?"

enough for you already, they attack your morality. The parsons will be preaching against you in church. You'll have to take a larger theater. A Finger Pillory.

The finger pillory is still preserved carefully in the parish church of St. Helen Ashby-de-la-Zouch and is thus described; An ancient and rather singular curiosity is a finger pillory. This instrument seems to have been used for the punishment of disorderly persons during divine service. It consists of two upright posts about three teet high, which support a beam of near-iv the same length, in which are bored holes of various dimensions, cut first horizontally, and then perpendicularly, in or der that the first joint of the finger may be inserted and the finger retained in an angular form. The culprit is then secured by bringing down over the holes another beam which is attached by a holes another beam which is attached by a hinge at the end to one of the posts and fastened at the other by a lock."—Church

HE WAS A KICKER.

And the Fact That the Other Man Didn't See Why Was Nothing to Him.

"I had to raise a row back in the dining car," said the baldheaded man as he entered the smoking our looking so upset "It's a thing I hate to do, but these cor-porations should be made to understand that the traveling public have rights."

"Wasn't the dinner all right?" he asked.
"Not by a long way! I asked the waiter to bring me some fat pork fried runs, and after keeping me waiting for ten minutes he returned to say that quall on toast was the very best he could do. I wanted some coffee made from old grounds, with milk in place of cream, and do you know they brought me some fresh made Java and said I'd have to make it so! I'm a great hand to eat frowey butter, but the walter pretended they hadn't such a thing on hand and rather insisted that I take fresh Orange county. As I said before, I hate to make a kick in public, but one must do it to get fair play."

"I don't see what excuse you had for kicking," said the man with the brice root.
"Oh, you don't! You are one of the sort that can be walked on and never say a word. I wanted in shed potatoss with lumps of the half done vegetable left in, but do you think I got 'ear: No, sir! I'm a great hand for dried apple same, But the waiter brought me fresh blackberries and wanted me to accept the substitute. I like my glass of milk at least balf water, but they brought me some with crosm on top. I like cucumber pickles, but the only things they had were gherbins and olives. They found out their mistake, however, when they tried to ride over me."

"As I said before, I don't see" - began the man with the brief root, when the kicker interrupted him with:

"Oh, of course not! Probably traveling d. h. and afraid to say your soul's your own. I prefer to eat with a kulfe and fock having no handles, but they pretended to have none. I never eat with a cloth on the table if I can help it, but they refused to remove it. I always use a towol for a mapkin, but they said it was majkin or norhing. Lastly, they insisted that I slt down and eat. They have evidently been having their own sweet way on this line for years past, and it astonished them not a little when I kleked. I'll raise another row with 'em in the morning, and perhaps they'll get it through their heads that they don't run all North America."

"My desr sir"— began the man with the brier root.
"That's enough!" chipped in the kicker.

"You are a fishworm and willing to be walked on. I am a kleker and want and will have my rights. Yes, sir and through nie the public will be benefited, and TH bet 10 to 1 that in less n a year the traveler on this very train who wants a glass of sour milk won't have champague at him as a substitute."-Detroit Free

A thin man, with a distressing cough was inspecting some permanents and trunks in front of a west end shop the other day, when the proprietor of the place appeared and asked:

Look og for a portmanteau, sir?" "Here's the best 30 shilling bar ever made, and I'm the only one that sells 'em at less than £5."
"No good," replied the thin man, with a sorrowful shake of his head, "One of these trunks wouldn't stand the journey from here to Bradford, the world. Take hold of one and bang it about and convince yourself."

"Of course I do. Take hold." The man with a distressing cough draw in a full breath, called one, "By your leave there!" as if warning a platform full of passengers, and then took hold of the trunk. Rip went the handle, being went the locks, and as he stood it on end and upset it and flopped it back again one hinge broke loose, and it split in two.

With a twist of the wrists he gave the
